

World cup celebrates local diversity

A football tournament is to take place in Reading to celebrate the many communities in the area.

They will all be competing to get their hands on the Unity World Cup, in the event organised by a local community group, reports Get Reading.

Unity is putting in the show during which 16 teams or more will be locked in a battle in win out against the others.

Moreover, at least ten different nations - including Poland and Ghana - are set to be represented in force at the potentially fun-filled event.

Malcolm Hinds, organiser of the occasion, said that people should attend to get a glimpse of the full range of culture on offer in the Berkshire area.

“The idea came from a few members within Unity’s management committee and it really is a celebration of the diversity of people and communities in Reading,” he told the publication.

He added that he hoped the weather would remain good for the event.

Last month, the annual Waterways Festival came to Newbury in the area, which is another family-oriented event.
