

Romans put Homes Under the Hammer

Property auctioneers Romans will take the limelight on Thursday appearing on BBC property show "Homes Under the Hammer".

The first property shown on the new series focuses on the procedure of buying a 3-bedroom house in Tilehurst.

The Sindlesham based company were filmed last year at almost all of their auctions and have been asked to return this year for the following series. Filming for this will begin next month.

Director of auctions, Simon Clayton, stated that "Even in a quiet market, auction properties are still selling well, and being selected to feature on Homes Under The Hammer was really the icing on the cake."

About Romans Auctions

Romans have been highly successful in developing one of the largest auction companies in the country, a major attraction for both buyers and sellers.

Using the latest technological advances, buyers who cannot attend the auction room can "view" the sale via the internet as it progresses and brief their agents at the event by telephone.

Providing a professional, safe and supportive service to sellers has been key to the growth of their success. Qualified expert auctioneers help buyers through the sale experience. Romans' experienced team of experts provide free valuations and advise sellers on the most effective method of obtaining the best possible price.

For more information on Homes Under The Hammer go to: www.bbc.co.uk/homes/tv_and_radio/huth_index.shtml

www.businessinberkshire.co.uk