

Who you gonna call

Real Life Ghostbusters are on their way to Slough and Windsor to investigate what is being called an unusual level of paranormal activity in the area.

The makers of "Living With The Dead" (a brand new TV series), say they have had a large response from the area who profess to their homes being haunted.

Peter Eyre (the Director of the show), said: "We have had a number of letters from people in Slough and Windsor who have had an experience with spirits.

Peter Eyre (the Director of the show), said: "We have had a number of letters from people in Slough and Windsor who have had an experience with spirits. It is very interesting and we're not quite sure why this might be".

"It may be because there are lot of old buildings in the area but it can be anything that attracts a spirit. It may be where the property is built, an incident in the past or even the occupants. We have had letters from people living in normal 1970s homes."

out for people who live in properties who may have been affected by a haunting.

The team will come to the property and investigate before a medium is shown round the house to get rid of the spirit.

Mr Eyre said: "Some people may be sceptical but for people who believe they are haunted it can really affect their lives."

The Living With The Dead team will be in Slough and Windsor in February and the show will be screened in May.
