

LogiXML comes to Reading

Intelligence software provider LogiXML has recently opened its first European office in Reading, Berkshire.

The Reading office will take care of all international operations and will help support and maintain LogiXML's worldwide presence.

LogiXML offer ad-hoc web-based reporting for companies who need to run their own reports on demand without the need of IT to build reports for them. This style of managed corporate reporting gives technical report developers the ability to build web-based reports and distribute them to users across the company.

The company provide enterprises with a wide range of services from advanced reporting, analysis and visualisation products with claims that these are affordable and built with easy implementation in mind.

With 22,200 plus developers in over 98 countries currently developing web-based reports with their software, LogiXML are confident that they have a solid foundation to expand their international business substantially in the near future. They are making an investment in that success with the establishment of the new international office in Reading.

For more information visit www.bcse.uk.net

www.businessinberkshire.co.uk